Call for Papers Fall 2013

The Saber and Scroll Journal is proud to announce our Fall journal topic:

“Revolutions that changed the world”

The Saber and Scroll Journal is currently soliciting articles and reviews for its fall 2013 edition. Published by APUS’ Saber and Scroll History Society, this edition will accept works on topics of history and historiography which deal with revolutions - feature paper topics could include those on the American Revolution, French Revolution, Russian Revolution, as well as the “revolutions” in communications, transportation, technology, civil rights....any “revolution” that has had a dramatic impact. The topic could be applicable to either history or military history.

Abstract Deadline: October 1, 2013
Manuscript Deadline: November 1, 2013

The Saber and Scroll is an Online University Historical Research Society affiliated with the American Public University School System. The purpose of this organization is the promotion of historical studies through the encouragement of academic research and the development of a rigorously edited online publication; the broadening of historical knowledge among the membership that includes social communications, topical discussions, historical lectures and the pursuit of other kindred activities in the interest of history; and service opportunities to the school and community. We strive to bring students, faculty, alumni, and historians-at-large together for intellectual and social exchanges, which promote and assist historical research and publication by our members.
